Trenches	1917 Mar. 27 Cont.		a height of probably fifty feet in No Man's Land and the simultaneous subsidence of the ground left a hole between 20 and 30 feet in diameter at about S. 15. C. 10. 45. It is worthy of note that the Artillery of the enemy, during the past 24 hours has shown greater activity than previously. Several shells landed in the vicinity of our front line and also in Youave Valley. In the course of the morning, quite a number of H. E. and shrapnel were fired on our front line area. In the afternoon Youave Valley was heavily bombarded with shrapnel and H. E., greatly communicating trench at the West side of Youave Valley being blown in in two or three places. - Our left front received some attention from the enemy's trench mortars, a few Whin Pans being thrown over in the morning. Our working parties last night were fired on by machine guns - Our Lewis and Brigade machine guns fired on two enemy machines that flew over our lines this morning. When we made a trial last night with coloured flares, the enemy evidently feared an
